

USAID HUMANITARIAN ASSISTANCE

USAID's Bureau for Humanitarian Assistance (BHA) leads and coordinates the U.S. government's disaster response efforts overseas. Helping people affected by crises is at the core of what we do every day, all over the world.

It reflects our values as Americans, demonstrates our global leadership, and makes the world a safer place.

How We Help: USAID helps tens of millions of people by providing critical humanitarian aid to people in need.

Strengthening Resilience: BHA doesn't just respond to humanitarian emergencies. We help lay the initial foundations for longer-term recovery.

Early Recovery efforts build on humanitarian responses and protect/restore basic systems and services

Risk Reduction programs prevent or reduce risks associated with chronic and recurrent hazards

Resilience activities help people, communities and countries mitigate, adapt to, and recover from shocks and stresses

USAID also had 11 Disaster Assistance Response Teams (DARTs) deployed, responding to earthquakes in Türkiye and Syria, flooding in Pakistan and Libya, an earthquake in Morocco, and ongoing crises in Ukraine, northern Ethiopia, Sudan, Afghanistan, Haiti, the South Caucasus, and the Venezuela region. BHA also provided elevated bureau support for the Horn of Africa drought.
