

PATHWAYS TO PROGRESS FOR SEXUAL AND REPRODUCTIVE HEALTH

Individuals have accurate information, skills, and ability to take action to achieve the highest attainable levels of sexual and reproductive health across their lifetimes.

Health systems provide quality, accessible, and people-centered sexual and reproductive health care.

Local stakeholders and governments foster social norms and policies that support individuals to act on their own sexual and reproductive health decisions, free from violence, coercion, and discrimination.

Challenge

45% of the demand for family planning with modern methods still needs to be met in countries supported by USAID

Challenge

44% of women in a union lack autonomy over their health, contraception, and sexual decisions

Challenge

0.5M births occur each year among girls aged 10-14

AREAS OF USAID ENGAGEMENT

Comprehensive sexuality education

Evidence-informed health systems, policies, and programs

Policy, advocacy, and governance to foster enabling environments

Social and behavior change to increase knowledge and reduce stigma

Financing and private sector engagement

Social and behavior change to shift harmful norms and practices

New or improved contraceptive methods

Person-centered care from high-performing providers

Research to understand social and gender norms and practices

Safe and effective self-care services

Available, affordable, quality products and services

Partnerships to end gender-based violence and drive positive sexual and reproductive health outcomes

USAID's family planning and reproductive health program works with partner countries to realize a world where ongoing improvements to sexual and reproductive health contribute to longer, healthier, and more prosperous lives for all.